REDHOUSE LÜGATİ

Türkiye Türkçesinin çok değerli ve çok mühim lûgatlarından biri de Sir James Redhouse'in hazırladığı eserdir. Redhouse Lûgatı adıyla tanınan bu eser aslında bir Türkçe-İngilizce sözlük olmakla beraber, Türkçenin kelime hazinesini içindeki bütün unsurları dikkate alarak bir bütün hâlinde verdiği için ilk büyük lûgat sayılabilir. Daha önce telif edilen lûgatiyat ya sâdece türkçe kelimeleri veya yalnızca arapça ve farsça kelimeleri ihtivâ ettikleri için, tam ve mükemmel değildi. Redhouse Lûgatı, Türkçenin bütün kelimelerini içine alan bir sözlük olması dolayısıyla, büyük değer taşımaktadır. Ancak, daha sonra meydana gelen Şemseddin Sâmî'nin Kâmûs-ı Türki'si böyle bir niteliğe sahip olabilmişse Redhouse Lûgatı, hem Türkçenin tarihi devresine âit kelimeleri de ihtivâ eden bir eser olması, hem Türkçe-İngilizce en büyük bir sözlük mâhiyeti taşıması sebebiyle değer ve önemini bugün de muhafaza etmektedir.

Eserin müellifi meşhûr şarkiyatçı Sir James Redhouse 1811 yılında Londra'da doğmuştur. Çocuk yaşta anne ve babasını kaybeden J. Redhouse onbeş yaşında iken, Akdenize açılan bir gemi ile İstanbul'a gelmiş, bir resmi denizce desnatör olarak vazifeye girmiştir. Sekiz yıl İstanbul'da kalan ve Türkçe öğrenen J. Redhouse, Londra'ya döndükten sonra Türkçe - Fransızca - İngilizce bir lûgat hazırlama çalışmalarına girişmiş, fakat o sırada Bianchi'nin Türkçe - Fransızca Lûgatı yayımlandığı için, kendi lûgatının yayımından vazgeçmiştir. 1838'de Türkiye'ye gelen J. Redhouse, önce Sadrazama, sonra Hâriciye Nâzırına mütemed tercüman tayin edilmiştir. Vazifesi 1840'ta Bahriye'ye nakledilen Redhouse, 1843'te İngiliz Sefarethanesi ile Osmanlı Devleti arasında mütemed tercüman olmuş ve on yıl bu vazifede kalmıştır. Vazifesinin ilk kısmını 1843'te Erzurum'da geçiren Redhouse, burada Türkiye ile İran arasındaki barış müzâkerelerine de katılmıştır. 1841'de Sultan Abdülmecid tarafından İftihâr ile taltif edilen Redhouse'a 1847'de İran şahı «Arslan» unvanı verilmiştir.

Çocuk tercümanlık vazifesinden sonra J. Redhouse, Türkiye'den ayrılmış, Londra'ya dönmüştür. 1855'te, Kırım Harbi vesilesiyle Türkiye'de bulunan İngiliz ve Fransız birlikleri mensupları için, Türkçe elkitabı mâhiyetinde Osmanlıca Klavuz (Vade Mecum of the Ottoman Colloquial Language) adlı kitap yayımlamıştır. Bunu müteakip müellif İngilizce - Türkçe ve Türkçe - İngilizce küçük bir sözlük hazırlamış ve eser tek cilt hâlinde neşredilmiştir (1857). Daha sonra Redhouse, 1860'da Londra'da kurulan ve mâli birinci Amiral şahıs ve teşekküllerce desteklenen bir komitenin isteği üzerine English and Turkish Lexicon (English and Turkish Lexicon) meydana na getirmiştir. 1861 de yayımlanan bu sözlük, 47 bin İngilizce kelime ve Türkçe karşılığını içinde bulundurmaktadır.

Bu yıllarda J. Redhouse Osmanlı Türkçesi ile Arapça ve Farsçanın bütün kelimelerini ve atasözlerini, Türkçe kitaplara, Kur'ân-ı Kerim'e ve İran şairlerinin eserlerine dayanarak bir araya getirmeği istemiş ve bu üç dilin büyük bir lûgatını hazırlamağa koyulmuştur. Fakat, Amerikan Yakın Doğu Misyonu 1878 de Redhouse'dan sâdece Osmanlı Türkçesinde kullanılan, daha mahdût sayıdaki Arapça ve Farsça kelimeleri ihtiva eden bir Türkçe - İngilizce lûgat yazmasını talep etmiştir. Yeni teklif ve şartlara uygun müsvoddeyi Redhouse dört yılda hazırlamış ve eserin üçte birine yakın ilk kısmı 1884 te yayımlanmıştır. Kitâb-ı Maânî-i Lehçe Li - Jamcs Redhouse el-İngilizî (A Turkish and English Lexicon Shewing the English Significations of the Turkish Terms) adını taşıyan bu lûgatın dizgi ve tashih çalışmaları on yıl kadar sürmüş ve eserin tamamı 1890 da yayımlanmıştır. Filmle şimdi tıpkıbasımı Türk okuyucusuna sunulan bu eser, Redhouse Lûgatı olarak şöhret kazanmıştır.

Bu lûgat üzerine 1884 te Cambridge Üniversitesi tarafından kendisine «Fahri edebiyat doktorluğu» pâyesi verilen J. Redhouse'a, 1888 yılında Britanya İmparatorluğunun dış münasebetleri ile ilgili olarak Hanedan'a yaptığı hizmetlere mükâfat olmak üzere «Şövalye» pâyesi ve Sir unvanı tevcih edilmiştir.

J. Redhouse Türk dilinin grameri ile de ilgilenmiştir. 1846 da Paris'te neşrettiği Grammaire Raisonnée de la Langue Ottoman adlı eseri birçok bakımlardan değerli ve dikkat çekicidir. Hâlen British Museum'da bulunan müsveddelerin ise, onun üzerinde uzun müddet çalıştığı, fakat tamamlayamadığı Türkçe - Arapça - Farsça dillerinin mufassal lûgatına öit olduğu sanılmaktadır.

Redhouse Lûgatı, Türkiye Türkçesinin tarihi devreleri ile ilgili metinler üzerinde araştırma ve inceleme yapacakların ihmâl edemiyeceği çok mühüm bir kaynaktır. Eski edebî dilimizde geçen Arapça, Farsça menşeli bütün kelimeleri bu sözlükte bulmak mümkündür. J. Redhouse pek çok esere başvurarak, zengin bir derlemeyle bu lûgatı hazırlamıştır. Kelimelerin öbür lûgatlarda bulunmayan çeşitli mânâları metinlere dayanılarak dikkatli şekilde verilmiştir. Redhouse Lûgatı, daha sonra meydana getirilenler de dâhil, Türkiye Türkçesinin en zengin sözlüğüdür. Eser 1890 dan sonra birkaç kere basılmıştır. Osmanlı Türkçesi yazısının alfabetik sırasına göre tertip edilen Redhouse Lûgatı, son olarak 1923 te basılmıştır. Tıpkıbasımı verilen kitap, lûgatın 1890 baskısıdır.

Çağrı Yayınları, Redhouse Lûgatı'nı eski yazı dilimiz metinleri üzerinde çalışanların hizmetine sunmakla hayırlı bir iş yapmıştır. Genç araştırmacılar bu değerli sözlükten büyük ölçüde faydalanacaklardır. Bu vesile ile müellif Sir James Redhouse'ı saygıyla anarız.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE

The Turkish Lexicon of Sir James Redhouse, which is now placed before the public, will speak for itself of the great acquirements and patient labors of its eminent author. A special statement on the part of the Committee of Publication is however due to the author, since the full fruit of his laborious preparation of manuscript for this Lexicon does not appear in the work as now published. A large amount of recondite and extremely interesting and valuable information concerning the History, Biography, Geography, and Religious practices of the peoples of Western Asia, was contained in the manuscript, which the Committee have been compelled to omit in publication. Limitations as to space imperatively demanded this regrettable sacrifice of material, which equals in the aggregate several hundred pages.

The Lexicon has undoubtedly suffered by reason of the impossibility of the author's presence in Constantinople during the process of publication, since not only the excision of the parts referred to, but the verification of many idioms and technical expressions have been confided necessarily to the Committee. For aid in this and other parts of its onerous undertaking the Committee is under unusual obligations to H. H. Ahmed Vefiq Pasha.

It should be noted here that the Publication Committee alone is responsible for the system of orthography of English words which is followed.

The long delay which has attended the publication of this great work has been partly due to its inherent difficulties, and partly to outside causes which could not be foreseen.

On behalf of the Publication Committee of the Mission of the American Board,

HENRY O. DWIGHT

PREFACE

In the spring of 1855, the author of the present Turkish and English Lexicon published a "Vade-mecum of Ottoman Colloquial Language", in the Preface of which he promised to prepare, "for the information of those who may wish afterwards to penetrate deeper into the arcana of this really beautiful tongue a series of more complete and scientific works". That book was written in the usual European characters only, as it was intended for the use of our army and navy, then cooperating with our ancient and most faithful ally the Sultan-Caliph of the Ottoman Empire, unjustly attacked by Russia.

In the year 1856, Mr. Quaritch, of 15, Piccadilly, London, engaged me to prepare a dictionary of the two languages, English and Ottoman Turkish, in two parts, English-Turkish and Turkish-English, the Turkish to be shown in its native characters, with a transliteration explaining the pronunciation in English letters. This work was also designed chiefly for the use of our naval, military, and civil officers in the East. It was to be prepared as quickly as possible, and to contain a vocabulary of about ten thousand words in each part. If I remember rightly, it was written and published, complete, in about four or five months time. In 1879, Dr. Charles Wells, with my ready consent, and even urging, edited a second edition of this Dictionary, with such additions to the vocabulary as he and Mr. Quaritch arranged between them. I here bear my testimony, with great pleasure, to the correctness and rapidity with which Dr. Wells achieved his task, for which, doubtless, many will be thankful to him.

In the year 1860, or earlier, an Anglo-Turkish Committee was formed in London for the purpose of assisting the American Missionaries resident in Turkey to prepare other works that should more especially facilitate to Turks, and other subjects of the Sultan, the acquisition of our language. An English-Turkish Lexicon from my pen, as complete as it could be made, was felt by the Missionaries to be one of the chief desiderata. Funds were being looked up for the purpose, when William Wheelwright, Esq., of Newburyport, Massachusetts, United States of America, then temporarily resident in London, most generously offered to bear the whole expense of that work, up to the sum of two thousand pounds. The compilation and printing of the Lexicon occupied about eight months of the most persevering labour, and the whole edition, with the copyright and stereotype plates; was presented by Mr. Wheelwright, as his free gift, to the American Mission at Constantinople. The English-Turkish Lexicon contains a vocabulary of about 47,000 English words explained in Turkish in all their various uses and senses, as far as possible; together with the compound terms, and the more usual phrases connected with the leading vocables. It contains also a sketch of English grammar, written in Turkish.

That Lexicon was an instalment of the author's promise, given in his Vade-mecum (of which a second edition was published in 1877 by Trübner & Co., of London), to prepare "a series of more complete and scientific works" for the public use.

But England was never aroused to take any interest in the numerous improvements that had been initiated in Turkey. In fact, all such improvements were ignored and systematically denied by public writers and speakers, in and out of parliament, in and out of office. Any call for a fellow volume to the Wheelwright Lexicon was never existent here, and nothing could be attempted in the way of publishing one. The Author had been sounding in various directions to see whether a Turkish-English Lexicon could not be launched, worthy to take place beside the Wheelwright gift; but no response was met with here. Hope had been laid aside, when a visit was made to the author, in the summer of 1878, by the Rev. Dr. E. B. Bliss, of the American Mission at Constantinople. To him was mentioned the utter want of success that had attended the proposal to publish such a work. Dr. Bliss saw the utility of the idea, mooted it to his brother Missionaries on his return home, and the result is now before the reader. To Dr. Bliss is the credit due of first welcoming the proposal; to the Committee of Publication of the American Mission at Constantinople belongs the satisfaction of having supported him, and of having trustfully undertaken to bring out the work. May it prove in their hands an instrument to effect as much good as the effort of one generation can look for. It was computed that the work would contain about 100,000 Turkish words of Turkish, Arabic, Persian, and European origin, in the Turkish character, with their pronunciation in European letters, their various significations, and as many usual compounds and phrases as could be collected. Four years sufficed for the preparation of the manuscript of about 93,000 words.

In compiling the present work. I have taken the vocabularies of Bianchi, Zenker, and Vefiq as my guides, adding many a necessary word from other sources, and occasionally consulting Golius, Meninski, Freytag, and Lane, as well as the Calcutta Arabic Qamus, the Turkish Qamus, a Persian Qamus, a manuscript Sihah, the Persian Surah, Vanqulu, the Sheref-Nama, Jihangiri, Burhan, Shu'uri, Reshidi, the Bahari-Ajem, and the Gi-yusu'l-lugat; not forgetting my own former compilation, entitled Muntakhabati-Lugati-Osmaniyya, written in 1838-41; a beautiful copy of which, in manuscript, paid for jointly by my friends Gen. Sir W. F. Williams, Bart. G. C. B. of Kars, Gen. Sir Collingwood Dickson, G. C. B., and Sir Patrick Colquhoun, Kt., Q. C., was presented in my name to H. I. M. Sultan Abdu'l-Mejid in 1846, which was lithographed and published in Constantinople by Mr. A. Churchill, proprietor of the Jeride'i-Hawadis in 1853, and the holograph original of which was, in that year, in London, presented to H. R. H. the Late Prince Consort by his Equerry, General Sir W. Wyld, K. C. B., at the request of Sir W. F. Williams, and is preserved in the Private Library of his late Royal Highness at Buckingham Palace. This work has passed through many editions at Constantinople. It contains a selection of about 26,000 Arabic and Persian words, culled by me from Turkish authors, and many of which are not found in the lexicons. Zenker does not mention this work among his authorities. It was published anonymously at the recommendation of Ali Pasha, then Minister of Foreign affairs; and perhaps for this reason is passed over in silence. I can trace many of my additions and explanations in the excellent work of Zenker; and am quite sure that very meritorious writer would have mentioned me, had he known that this book was mine; as he frequently does, when quoting from my Quaritch volume. For this courtesy my best thanks are due to him and are here cordially offered.

The older European works above mentioned are too well known to require comment. Bianchi is almost entirely an abstract from Meninski, including even the gross blunder of the latter, by which misquoting d'Herbelot, he makes النجي mean "a saviour", but which is avoided by Zenker. The work by this last-named author is rich in proofs of great pains-taking. He has done what I have long practised, and what has made Vefiq's work all the more copious; namely, he has extracted from the Turkish Qamus, etc., numerous Turkish words, and has explained them by means of their Arabic equivalents.

I have done my best after an absence from Turkey of more than thirty years, during the whole of which I have been engaged in lexicography, and can only hope my work will be found, taking it all in all, not unequal to its predecessors. Its chief recommendation to English-speaking students is that it is explained in English. By all who consult it, I hope it will be found useful.

London, November, 1890

J. W. REDHOUSE

THE transliteration of OTTOMAN WORDS.

The system of orthography used in this Lexicon in the transliteration of Ottoman words, is briefly explained as follows:

A peculiarity in the transliteration of the consonant l in some Arabic words is as follows: An initial l of any Arabic word (or syllable) is essentially a consonantal hemze (·); that is, it is followed by a vowel in the same syllable. It is of two kinds, the one called the hemze of severance (the hemze of severance) and the other the hemze of junction (the hemze of junction). These two kinds of l differ in transliteration.

(a) hemze of severance. In Arabic words beginning with this letter which are adopted into Turkish, the consonantal nature of the hemze is ignored, and its vowel alone is considered; so that in practice, the hemze as an initial to words used in Turkish may be treated as a vowel. Thus the words أصل, إسلام, and أصول, are transliterated in this Lexicon as asıl, islām, and asıl; being divested of the sign which properly should represent the consonantal hemze.

(b) hemze of junction. The name of this kind of hemze implies that the word of which it is the initial letter is joined to the one which precedes it. This junction is effected by making the last consonant of the preceding word form one syllable by means of its vowel with the consonant following the hemze of junction. This hemze is therefore elided in pronunciation. For example, in the name عبد القادر the first letter of the definite article ال is a hemze of junction. The preceding word عبد (when standing alone) has to be pronounced ‘abdu, ‘abā, ‘abā, according to its grammatical construction, the first (nominative case) being the form commonly used by the Turks in pronouncing words of this class. Eliding in pronunciation the hemze of junction, the full name is read 'abdu-'i-qādir. The usual European orthography of such Arabic names, where the first elements are written Abdul or Abd-el, is erroneous and ungrammatical. In this Lexicon the apostrophe is used in such cases to transliterate the elided hemze of junction; as عبد الزاق 'abdu-'r-rozzāq. نصر الدين nusrū-'a-dīn.

The reason for the choice of q to represent the letter ق, is the fact that q historically represents that letter. Comparing our alphabet with the Semitic alphabets of the ajed order, they will be found to correspond in arrangement. ajed corresponds with a, b, c, d, when it is admitted that c is abnormal, representing in fact the Semitic ج (Comp. α, β, γ, δ). Examining the two words عصف فرشت of the ajed formula, we see that س is rejected, ع corresponds with o, ف with p, م rejected, ق with q, ر with r, ش with s, and ت with t. Very old Greek inscriptions contain a letter Q which is our q and the Semitic قāf. These considerations have led the best authorities to use q in transliteration of the letter ق.

In Arabic words where a reduplicated consonant is represented by a single character, with or without the teshdid sign, it is transliterated by doubling its English equivalent; since careful reduplication in the pronunciation is essential; e. g. فلاح fallāh. حس hiss. Exception to this rule is made in the case of some Arabic words naturalized in Turkish in such form that it would be mere pedantry to insist on the doubling of the letter. For example, in the numerous class of Arabic relative adjectives masculine ending in the consonant ي, this letter is really reduplicated (as رحاني rahānīyy), but in Turkish is treated as though it were a long vowel. This established usage fixes the method of transliteration. Thus رحاني is rendered rahmānī. The reduplicated consonant reappears however, in transliterating the feminine form of this class of words. In Arabic the feminine of رحاني is رحانية. In Turkish the final consonant ى is softened into a vowel ı, and the word becomes رحانی pronounced and transliterated rahmānıyyı.

2. THE VOWELS

The Ottoman Turkish language possesses sixteen vowel sounds; eleven short, and five long. These are represented in transliteration in this Lexicon by the following signs:

ā as in far	ī as in bird
ā as in war	ī as in machine
ā as in ashore	ī as ī broad, (qīrāt)
ā as in pan	ō as in so
ā as in far , broad, (āsmān)	ū as in rule
ā as in war , broad, (nāfir)	ū as in French tu
ō as in met	ū as in fur
ī as in did	ū as in rude

These various sounds are expressed in Turkish writing, though in a defective manner, by the use of the Arabic vowel points and letters of prolongation, and by certain other devices, as follows:

(a) The Arabic vowels.

The Arabic language has three short and three long vowels recognized and marked. The short vowels may be indicated by three special signs; viz. 1. (◌) fet-hā فتحه (an opening). This sign is called ustūn اُستون in Turkish. 2. (◌) kesrō كسر (a breaking) called eserō اِسر in Turkish; and 3. (◌) zammā (a folding to), called utūrū اُتورو in Turkish. These signs are called حرک (movements) by the Arabs, but by Europeans they are commonly called vowel points.

The felha and kesre signs have two values. With a soft consonant the felha has the value of ا, and with a hard consonant, that of آ. With a soft consonant kesre has the value of ي and with a hard consonant, that of ى.

The zamma sign has the value of و.

The Arabic long vowels are represented by the letters ا, و, and ى, which, when thus used are called letters of prolongation. These letters correspond respectively with the vowel points; thus in the Arabic word باب bab, the ا is used in prolongation of the felha of the initial consonant; in مارج marj the ى prolongs the kesre of the initial م; and in نن nan the و prolongs the zamma of the initial; These three vowel letters can never be reduplicated.

These letters of prolongation were naturally received and used in Persian and Turkish when the use of the Arabic characters was adopted for those languages. In Persian the Arabic rules have been more strictly adhered to, the letters of prolongation being used to indicate long vowels only, with two exceptions:

(1) A short vowel at the beginning of a Persian word may be represented by ا, which is read ا, آ, ي, or و, as the word requires. (2) The Persian pronoun او aw and numeral دو du are written with و, although the vowel is short.

In Turkish the letters of prolongation have been used with scant regard to the Arabic usage. On the adoption of the Arabic characters, the Turks already possessed books written in the Syriac character, in perpendicular columns after the Chinese fashion, and with the Syriac letters of prolongation used as short vowels. It was natural therefore that when they began to use the Arabic characters they should carry out their old system of expressing nearly every vowel, by recourse to the Arabic letters of prolongation. To this day, Turkish as written beyond the Oxus abounds in the three long vowel letters used to represent short vowels. Among the Western Turkish tribes, however, the Arabic rules had greater influence. Since it is doubtful whether a distinctly long vowel exists in any truly Turkish word, Turkish was written in Western Asia under Arabian influence without use of the letters of prolongation. The result of this was that in the old Ottoman documents, Turkish words very different in pronunciation and sense, are found written exactly alike, constituting an enormous difficulty to the reader. This difficulty was so evident that the system of Ottoman orthography was gradually changed. The "hard" and "soft" pairs of consonants were resorted to as far as possible, in order to distinguish between words of similar sound; and the Arabic letters of prolongation were used as far as it was deemed absolutely necessary, to represent Turkish short vowels. Hence in Ottoman Turkish, these letters have become mere vowels, with no idea of prolongation about them, and they are put into a word or syllable, almost at the option of the writer, merely to assist the reader.

(b) The letter (آ)

The sign medd (ـ) was devised by the Arabian grammarians to be used over each of the letters of prolongation to show that they are not consonants, and especially to be placed over a vowel ا when followed by a consonant hemze in the same word; as in قَاتِل qātil. It was next utilized to mark an ا made to do duty for a consonant hemze followed by a long vowel ا; as in the word مَاتِل mātil, for مَاتِل. The sign was regarded by the Persians as equivalent to و, and was adopted to distinguish their long vowel ا as an initial from the short vowel ا, without regard to Arabian rules; as in أَرَام etc. It thus passed into use among Ottoman writers to ı. 1 îlîz. First letter of the Turkish alphabet. Commonly called nömze also; though this is not really correct in any word not originally Arabic.

As an initial letter, it takes all the eleven vowel sounds, and, in Turkish, is always a vowel, as it is also in Persian. In Arabic, on the contrary, it is, as an initial, always a consonant, being the spiritus lenis of the Greek, as ع, its harsher fellow, is the spiritus asper of that tongue. For the first five vowel sounds, the initial ı requires no addition to itself, unless when, in the first two only, it is made long. In this case, the sign of prolongation, maâ, is sometimes figured over it, ı̄, in writing and in printing. More frequently, however, this sign is omitted. When the ı is to be, as an initial, pronounced with either of the two sounds of i, it is sometimes followed by a vowel letter ی, the two together making, in reality, but one letter. The two are never to be considered a diphthong, that peculiarity being unknown in Turkish. When, again, the ı, initial, is to be pronounced with any one of the four remaining vowel sounds of o or u, it is sometimes followed by a vowel letter و, these two, then, making also one vowel letter, as far as pronunciation is concerned. These two following vowels are short in Turkish words; in Arabic and Persian words they are long, being tech-

When ı̄ is a medial letter, it always has one of the first two sounds of a, and is always long in words of Arabic or Persian origin; unless, in case of an Arabic word, it be then marked with a nömze sign over it, ı̄. It is then a quiescent consonant ending a syllable; as, تَابِل ı̄. In Arabic words, as a medial, an ı̄ may be marked by a sign of prolongation, ı̄. It then begins a new syllable, and is equivalent to two letters ı̄, one radical, the other servile; as, مَال ı̄. In words of Turkish origin, a medial ı̄ is not always long. In fact, it may be doubted or denied that real Turkish words, of Turkish origin, ever have a long vowel.

As a final letter, ı̄ always has one of the first two a sounds. In words of Turkish origin, it is always, or generally short, but is always long in Persian words. In Arabic words it may, as a final, be either long or short, correctly and grammatically; but in use, it is then always taken to be long in Turkish. The difference in Arabic is very great in the two cases thus degraded into one in Turkish, as in Persian. A grammatically short final ı̄, in Arabic, is sometimes so written; as, مَا ı̄, but sometimes it is figured as a letter ی; thus, طوبى ı̄. Such Arabic words are, when used in Turkish or Persian, generally written طوبا ı̄, حنا ı̄, but not always. When a grammatically long ā occurs as the last letter of an Arabic word, it is always followed, correctly, by another syllable, represented by a nemzō sign; thus, ‘ulēmā’, ‘orbā’. This final nemzō, in these cases, is always suppressed, when the words are used, in Turkish or Persian phrases, as Turkish or Persian adopted expressions. It is shown, when an Arabic quotation is introduced as a foreign sentence.

In chronograms, and in numbering the members of a series, the letter ā, whether bearing any mark or not, represents the number 1; as see, voce ā.

A. ā elīf, or nemzō. These two names are given in a rather confused manner, together or separately, to several different things. They are both given to an initial consonantal ā, whether radical or servile, whether the ā be marked or omitted. They are both given also to the interrogative ā, which is always prefixed to the first word of the interrogative sentence; thus, ā ā (in Turkish and Persian ā ā). In this position, ā, radical or servile, can take all three of the Arabic vowel sounds after it, like other consonants; for this initial ā is always a consonant, and in Arabic there are but three vowels, a, i, u. Thus, ā ā (Turkish ā ā), ā ā (T. ā ā), ā ā (T. ā ā). If a radical and servile ā come together grammatically at the beginning of a word, no matter which precedes the other, the two are combined, in writing, into one ā; thus, ā ā, where the servile ā grammatically precedes; and, ā ā, where the radical is the real initial. These are, respectively, for ā ā and ā ā or rather ā ā.

As a medial letter, in Arabic words only, ā may either be the last letter of a preceding syllable, or the first letter of a following syllable, and is a consonant in either case. Thus, ā ā (T. P. ā ā), where it ends the first syllable; and ā ā, where it begins and ends the second syllable; and ā ā, where it begins the second syllable (and really ends it also; for, grammatically, the word is ā ā in the nominative indeterminate). As a medial radical, ā may be followed (but never preceded) by a servile ā of prolongation (not ā); the two are then combined into one ā, as in the case of the initial; thus, ā ā.

As a medial radical, ā, as any other consonant, can be reduplicated under the sign ā, thus, ā ā ā ā. It may even combine the two signs ā and ā; thus ā ā ā ā.

When radical ā, being or becoming medial, is itself movent with a u vowel, or follows another consonant movent with that vowel, it is changed, in writing, into ā; and if with the i vowel, into ā, instead of ā; thus, ā ā (P. T. ā ā); ā ā (P. T. ā ā); ā ā (P. T. ā ā); ā ā (P. T. ā ā); ā ā (P. T. ā ā).

As a terminal, radical or servile, ā or ā (without the ā) begins and ends a syllable by itself; thus, ā ā. If such word be a noun in the accusative indeterminate, an ā is added after ā, as after any other consonant, to support, as it is termed, the indeterminate accusative case-sign; thus, ā ā.

T. ā ā, interj. 1. (placed before a noun, forms a vocative) O! Heigh! Holloa! ā ā, O! My kind sir! ā ā Heigh! My life! 2. (placed after any word, corroborates a retort, or a remark) ā ā I am come, ā ā I am come, you see, ā ā Look here, thou, ho! (After a vowel, this becomes ā; thus, ā ā he is come, you see; ā ā don't, don't do so, don't do that, ho!)

P. ā ā, particle (placed between two different words, or between two occurrences of the same word) combines the two words into a compound indicative of continuation or repetition; thus, ā ā from head to foot; ā ā from end to end; ā ā click, clack (of the clashing of arms in combat); ā ā colour upon colour, of various colours or sorts, various.

A. آب. s. A father. أب from father. from grandfather; i. e., ancestrally (received or descended in past time). N. B. When this word governs another noun in an Arabic phrase, and is itself in the nominative, it is written and pronounced أب; when itself in the genitive, أب; and when itself in the accusative, أب; thus آب أب. Abū-Bokr. أب أب. Abū-Bokr. (I saw, etc.) Abū-Bokr. Frequently, the ا is then dropped; the compounds then become: أب, أب, أب; whence آب for آب, accus. of آب the father of Yezla, Bāyezla.

cian, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin alphabets, the first nine letters represent the units; the next nine, the tens; the third nine, the hundreds; and the last, one thousand; thus

أبدال ١٠٠٠ ٩٠٠ ٨٠٠ ٧٠٠ ٦٠٠ ٥٠٠ ٤٠٠ ٣٠٠ ٢٠٠ ١٠٠
 ٩٠ ٨٠ ٧٠ ٦٠ ٥٠ ٤٠ ٣٠ ٢٠ ١٠ ٩ ٨ ٧ ٦ ٥ ٤ ٣ ٢ ١

١٠٠٠ ٩٠٠ ٨٠٠ ٧٠٠ ٦٠٠ ٥٠٠ ٤٠٠ ٣٠٠ ٢٠٠ ١٠٠

The method of numeration by letters of the alphabet. Thus ك is 21. ب is 32. ح is 43, د is 54, etc., 101. ر is 202, etc.; 1005. In chronograms the order of the letters is not considered. All their values are added together. Thus خراب is $600 + 200 + 1 + 2 = 803$, date of the Hijra year when ʿAbd al-Damascus in ruins بليد is $2 + 30 + 4 + 400 + 9 + 10 + 2 + 400 = 857$, date of the year when the Beautiful city, Constantinople, was taken by the Ottomans.

A. اصنعتاق izûfê, s. 1. A subsequent annexation, an accidental annexation of a quality to a substance. 2. The annexation of one noun to another, for the purpose of more strictly defining the latter. In Persian grammar the vowel or ker is added in pronunciation to the quiescent final consonant, a kesrated hamze, to a final vowel o, or a kesrated consonantal y to a final â, or a kesra to a final y, of the first of two nouns. The second noun may be a substantive, adjective, or pronoun. This form of izafer is much used in Turkish. Thus; ذلف بار, The tresses of a dear one. خانه سرور, The house of joy. رضای تام rizâyî tamm, Complete satisfaction. In Arabic grammar the meaning of such combinations is much more extensive, but as this does not concern Turkish, it is not here necessary to go into the subject. بیانه — Explicatory annexation, where the second word explains some peculiarity of the first, as, a ring of gold.

تدبریه — Supposititious annexation, in Arabic grammar, is annexation without a preposition expressed, but still understood. حقیقه — Real annexation; as معنویه — q. v. لايه — محضه — A pure annexation, in Arabic grammar, is when the second noun is either the name of the owner or the like, or of a peculiarity, of the first. لفظیه — Verbal annexation, in Arabic grammar, is annexation with a preposition expressed. معنویه — A logical annexation, where the relation between the words is real and not merely apparent; as محضه —.

A. اصنعتاق izûfê, vn. 1. A putting one thing with another, so that the first shall be somehow connected with, or attributed to, the second. 2. See اصنعتاق 3. T. اوستوبū. a. Prepared, coated, soiled with tow or oakum.

T. اوستū. s. The vowel sound and sign, used in Turkish words to indicate the sound which should follow the consonant over which it is placed. Its sound has five modifications in Turkish, all short, besides the long sound of some of them. In Arabic and Persian there are not so many modifications. In the present work, the five modifications are represented by the following signs: ā, as a in father; ā, as a in wall, shortened so as usually to correspond with the sound of o in got; ā, as a in dilemma; ā, as a in man; ē, as e in men. To indicate the long sound of the same vowel the sign — is added, as āā, āb, etc. اوستون s. Double ūstūn, in Arabic sentences, is the terminal sign of the accusative case indefinite of triptote nouns substantive or adjective; it reads ān, and is figured °; It is always followed by a letter l, except when the word ends with the feminine ة; thus: رَجُلًا حَسَنًا rejlūān ḥasanān (a handsome man)

سَيِّدَةً sēyīdētān (a lady). In Turkish, it betokens an adverbial use of the Arabic word. Thus: أَوَّلًا ūvālān, firstly; بِحَرٍّ by sea; Sometimes n is dropped in the pronunciation; as اَوَّلًا ūvālā.

 T. ایمش īm-sh, 3d. pers. sing. Pres.
 Dubitative of ایم (They say, or, I believe) he, she, or it is. (In writing, this word is used by good authors,
 instead of ایمدی, as the Perfect tense Indicative. But commonly, the word throws doubt on the discourse of which it is the verb, like the English phrase "so they say.")
 T. ایمک īm-ek, v. i. Defective. To be.
 (The Infinitive and much of the conjugation is obsolete. The Present tense Indicative has only the first person in both numbers: ایم I am, and ایز we are. The Perfect is complete:
 ایم I was, ایمک thou wast, ایمدی he was,
 etc.; so also the Conditional ایمم if I am ایمم if I were, etc., and the Present and Preterite dubitative: ایمش ایمش or ایمم ایمم, etc. The gerund ایمش, and the past verbal noun, ایمش the having been, are in constant use.)

this radical and the permutative servile coalesce into one under a teshdid; as, اطلاع ʿiṭāʿ, for اطلاع, and اظهار ʿiẓār, for اظهار. Again, when the first radical letter is د or ذ, in the eighth form the servile ت changes into د or ذ, as may be, and coalesces with the radical under a teshdid; as, ادعا and مدعى for ادعى and ادعى, and ادخار and مدخر for ادخار and ادخار. When the first radical is ز, the servile ت of the eighth form changes into د; as, ازدواج and مزدوج, for ازدواج and مزدوج.

In Arabic nouns, substantive and adjective, of certain feminine forms, the letter ت as a servile final letter indicative of the feminine gender, and sometimes, in substantives, indicative of unity, assumes the forms : or ۛ; the former used as a separately written letter, the latter joined to the character that precedes it; as, قدرة, دولة and دولت, etc.

These Arabic words are used in Persian and Turkish as adjectives or substantives of the feminine gender. Such adjectives, in Persian and Turkish, are pronounced as in Arabic, and are written without dots to the last letter; as, مرفوبه murgūbbē, قائمه qāʾimē, etc. But, with substantives, Persians and Turks do not follow the same rule in all cases, and Persians do not adopt the same rule as the Turks. The majority of such substantives, perhaps, are treated like the feminine adjectives, the final dots disappear, and the final letter becomes a virtual vowel, both in Persian and in Turkish; as, خلیفه khāʾifē, متاره munārē, vulg. munārē; etc. None of these words should be transliterated with a final h, since many Eastern words really end in aspirated h, as, سلم sūlm, شرف shērōn, etc. As it is not usual to pronounce in English a final letter h in words of more than one syllable, the best substitute is, perhaps, an a. The substantives above given would then be transliterated kh ilifa, shurfa or sherefa, menara or minara, etc. This recommendation is not without a grave imperfection; but, owing to the defects of English orthography a better cannot be suggested.

Some of these Arabic feminine substantives, however, are not so treated. Instead of their final letter losing its dots and becoming a virtual final vowel, it is changed, among the Persians and Turks (not the Arabs) into an ordinary ت; as, قدرت qūdrēt, دولت adēvīēt, for the Arabic قدرة and دولة, etc. In this matter the Persians and Turks do not always follow the same practice; a Persian sometimes uses such a word as دولت adēvīē, vulg. Pers. adōiā, where a Turk uses دولت adēvīēt.

In a very few Turkish words where ت is the final letter of the root or of the uninflected form, it changes into د by inflexion, when immediately followed by a vowel in pronunciation; as, دُرْت dūrt, دُرْد dūrdin, دُرْد dūrdō; اِئْت īmēk, اِئْت īdēr, گُئْت gyūtmēk, گُئْت gyūder. In most cases, however, it remains unchanged; as, قَاتَمَق qātmaq, قَاتَر qātār; even اِئْت īmēk (in another sense), اِئْت īdēr, etc.

In some similar cases, where the final letter is really a ت, the word is written with د, even in the nominative; thus, فُوت, is often written فُود, because it becomes فُودك, etc., in its cases. And so of many others.

The letter ت of Turkish words, from want of a generally established standard of orthography, is, in other positions as well as final, at times interchanged with د, and at times with ط, according to the fancy of the writer, his locality, or his epoch. Thus we find the word تارلا tarlā, sometimes written طرلا; we see بلوت and بلوط for بلوت. These are declined بلودك, بلود, etc.; but بلوتك, بلوتك, etc., when the ت ends a syllable. We have also the variants پاتلیجان, پاتلیجان, and دامنغا varying with پاتلیجان, etc.

The letter ت also serves to form the causative verbal root (imperative sing.) of verbs whose simple verbal root ends in a vowel (as, اراتمق, اراتمق, etc.), of some verbs whose simple root ends in ر, ل, ق,
